

First of all, I would really recommend this event to any readers since it can always widen your horizon no matter what grade are you in or what major do you have. During this trip, I have mastered several important skills, communication and job seeking.

For the communication part, during the trip, we have lots of opportunities to visit so many famous companies, such as Facebook, Microsoft and Amazon. However, each company does have its own culture and working path, which you won't be able to resonate with if you were not here. In particular, when I had the chance to visit Microsoft, I was really shocked by nearly all the employees working there are the firm believer of the company's mission statement, "empower every person and every organization on the planet to achieve more". I have never been this close to company this close before, which explains my surprise is because of lacking the chances to visit companies and talk to people. Thus, with this trip, one of my biggest takeaway is the improvement of my communication skills.

Secondly, the point about job seeking is more straightforward. Companies are always different from your imagination. After this trip, it truly provides me with a much more comprehensive view of a company.

Last but not least, not only did I have the chance to get to know the alumni and the people working in the industry but also my fellow classmates, who are from various grade and major. Talking to them and learning about other majors in a more deeper level was also another great enjoyment I had during the trip. Overall, there's nothing else I can say about it besides recommending it to you!!!
